Nasdaq Composite vs S&P 500

Source: Yahoo Finance via yfinance | Retrieved: 2026-11-12T16:47:38.027615+00:00 | Price field: Close

Tickers: ^IXIC (Nasdaq Composite), ^GSPC (S&P 500) | Units: index points

	1_week	1_month	6_months	1_year
Nasdaq Composite	+4.77% / 21.51%	-6.50% / 29.10%	-2.35% / 21.01%	+8.84% / 19.60%
S&P 500	+3.75% / 17.24%	-2.28% / 20.95%	+3.09% / 14.04%	+11.36% / 13.72%

Each cell shows period-end price change / annualized historical volatility.

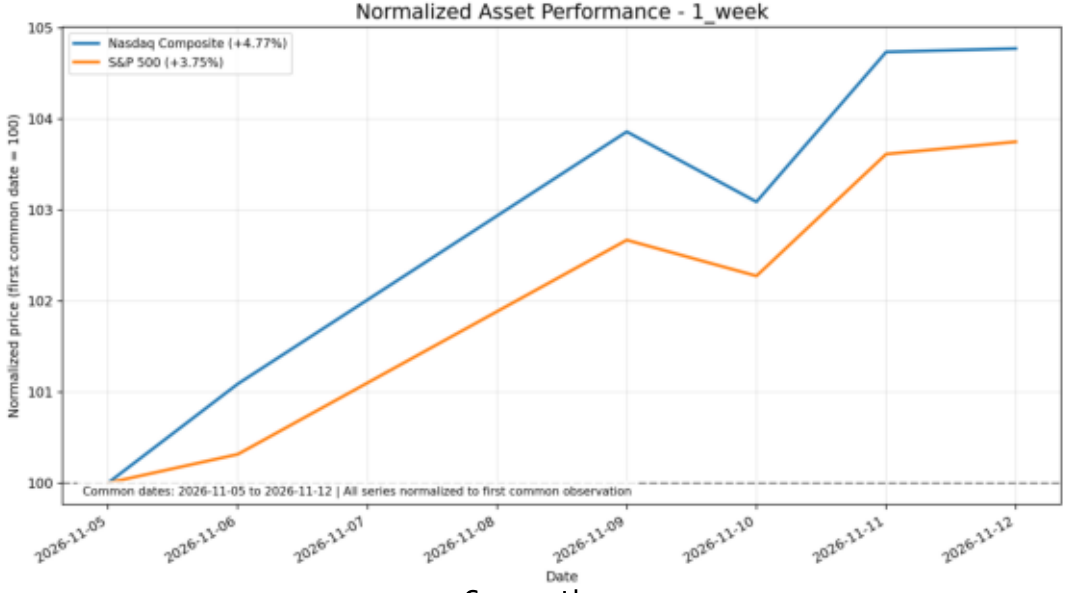

Method: first and last available daily observations in each calendar window; volatility is sample standard deviation of daily simple returns annualized with 252 trading days.

Comparison curves use only common dates and start at 100. Weekends and market holidays are not filled or interpolated.

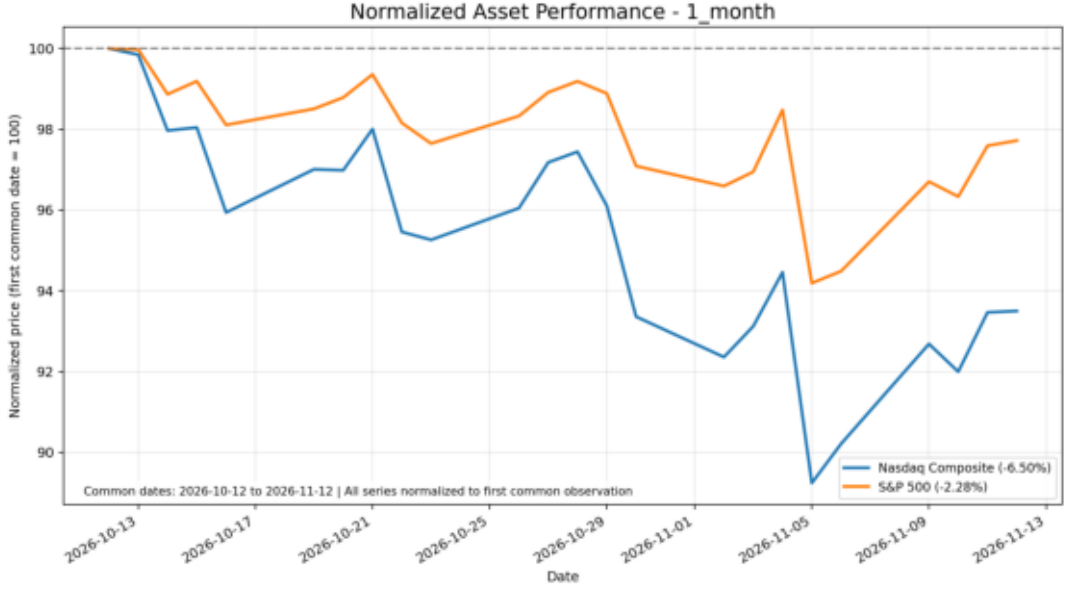

Historical analysis only; it is not investment advice. See summary_statistics.csv for detailed dates, prices, observations, and provenance.

Normalized performance by analysis window

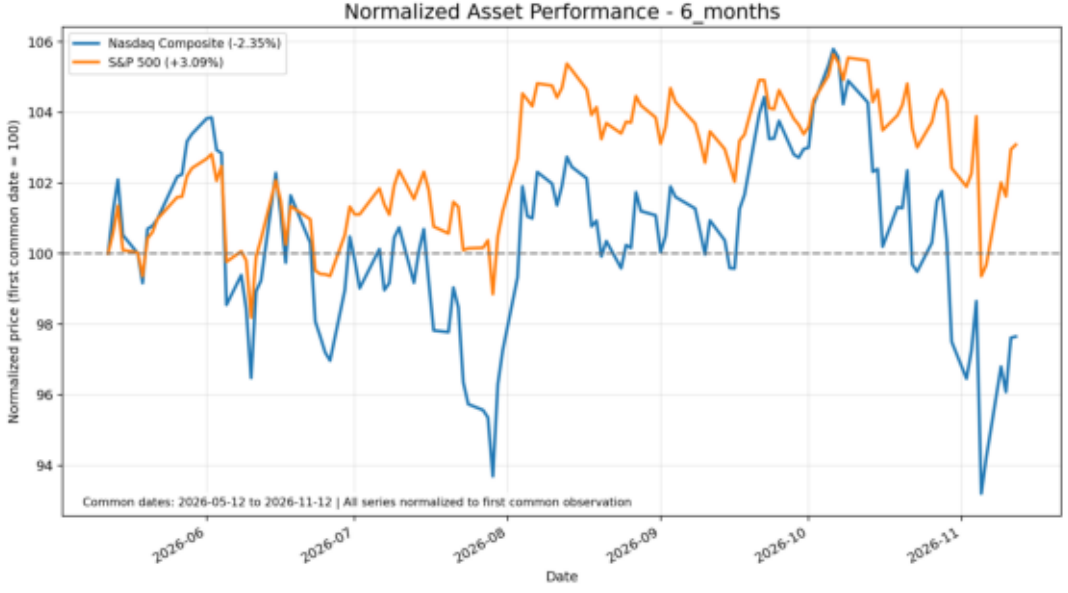

1_week

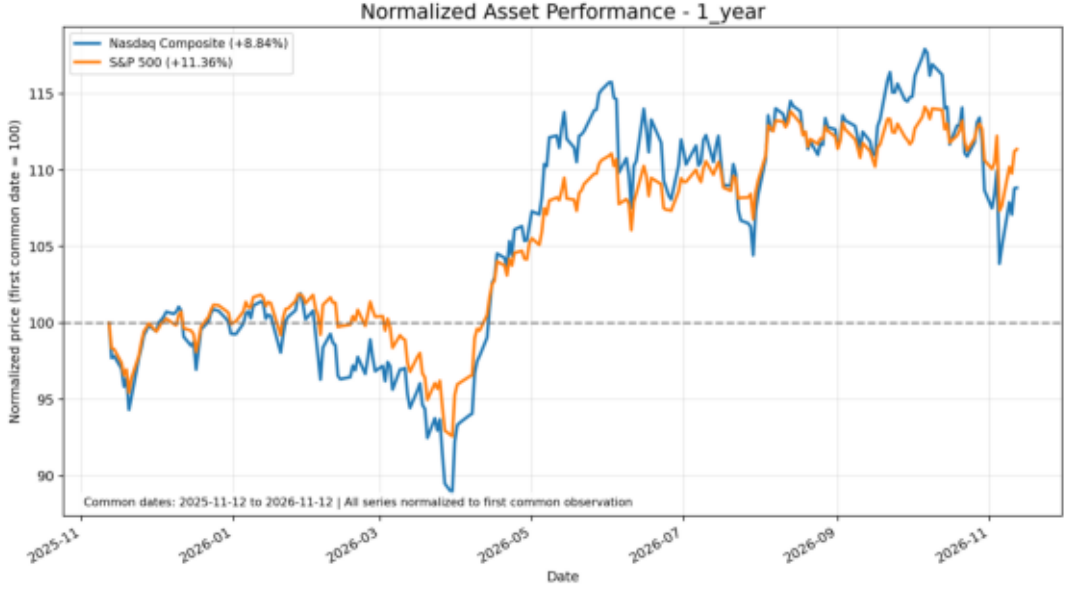

1_month

6_months

1_year

Over one year, S&P 500 had the strongest change (+11.36%), while Nasdaq Composite had the weakest (+8.84%). The higher one-year annualized volatility was Nasdaq Composite at 19.60%.